Chapter 9 How to Communicate With Members of Congress

There are many ways to communicate with policymakers: letters, postcards, e-mail, phone calls, faxes, and face-to-face meetings. Advocates often wonder which method is most effective and whether all are counted equally. Each Congressional office has its own calculus and system for handling and "counting" different communications. Generally, each policymaker gets a regular report from staff regarding how many letters, postcards, e-mails, phone calls, and faxes have been received on various issues and what positions constituents are advocating. No matter what method you use, the most important thing is to ensure your voice is heard.

All offices handle constituent communication differently. Therefore, you might want to call each of your Members' offices and inquire on their preferred method of constituent input.

For the most part, the information below and the tips and guidelines found in the next chapter apply to all forms of written communication, including faxes, e-mails, and regular letters.
